Giclée Giclée is the French word meaning "to spray or to squirt with a nozzle." The term "giclée print" connotes an elevation in printmaking technology. Images are generated from high resolution digital scans and printed with archival quality inks onto canvas. The giclée printing process provides better color accuracy than other means of reproduction. Another tremendous advantage of giclée printing is that digital images can be reproduced to almost any size and onto various media. The quality of the giclée print rivals more traditional methods and is commonly found in museums, art galleries, and photographic galleries. Wrap Method This is a method of stretching artist's canvas so that the canvas wraps around the sides onto stretcher bars and is secured to the back of the frame. The term gallery wrap refers to an image that appears on the sides of the frame as well as the front. The image on the sides is either a continuation or a reflection of the main image, or an otherwise fabricated element such as a solid color or colors derived from the adjacent image. This method of stretching and preparing a canvas allows a frameless presentation of the finished painting. Hanging System Designed to withstand 60mph winds, each print includes a simple yet effective hardware for outdoor installation. The "hooks" can be screwed into a stone, stucco, brick, wood, or aluminum. Brackets affixed to the back of the image snap into place on then hooks. A template is included for ease of installation. Waterproof, UV protected and gallery wrapped on 1 1/2" vinyl stretcher bars with stainless steel staples. This outdoor Canvas Art can be placed in any outdoor location with direct exposure to the elements.
